

Organizer to Address BSU On Pan-African Unification

The organizer of the all-African People's Revolutionary Party will be the keynote speaker Thursday evening at a meeting of the Black Student Union.

Kwame Toure, one of the leading black activists in the U.S., will address the public on many issues, including his association with the Black Panthers, anti-apartheid, and Pan-Africanism, in Diefendorf 147 at 7:30 p.m.

"Pan-Africanism involves the importance of unification among black students and black people in general," Josie Rollan, a member of the Black Student Union, said. "Black unity is important. It's important in order to organize for liberation."

Kwame has been at the forefront of the struggle for black rights. He has been a leading activist for civil rights, and provided leadership in the black-power movement. He has also been a driving force in the student non-violent coordinating committee.

potential members to join their clubs. Whichever track you choose, you will stay with the same people the whole day and get a chance to get to know them better.

Former UB student to speak

The keynote speaker this year will be Phil Samuels, a graduate of UB who also did work on his Ph.D. here. While doing his graduate work, Samuels taught such courses as Business Administration, Communication Skills, and Organizational Communication. Right now, he is head of Human Resources at Goldome, and owns his own rapidly growing graphic design business.

"He's good at motivating

● see LEADERS page 9

Leaders

● continued from page 3

---

students and is a very powerful speaker," claims Brodka.

Just in case you do not think this conference is right for you, Brodka believes it is important to mention that the conference "isn't only for people who are leaders now on campus, but for people who just want to work on their own leadership development."

The conference costs $10 in advance and $12 at the door. The expense covers lunch, a coffee break mid-morning, and a reception after the conference, where you'll get a chance to mingle with administrators and lecturers.